ROMAN CATHOLIC bishops, moving to ease the worst political crisis bounding President Menchagual-Arrese, yesterday refused to join a mounting clamor for her resignation amid allegations she stole last year's election but advised her not to dismiss such a call.

RAM threatens to intervene to end impasse

By Luis A. del Puerto

THE REFORMATORY MOVEMENT (RMO) threatened "to move to its own constituency" if there is no change in attitude. A new leadership is needed, it said, to bring about a new leadership.

At the same time, it would include the taking up of its critical Mary Capi (Pangasinan) challenge, the RMO spokesperson said.

"This is not a threat. We are just telling the politicians to get their own priorities in order. We are going to see to it that our (RMO) is really in a position to do things the citizens want, then allow ourselves to be incorporated into the power," he said.

If not, he said, the RMO will intervene.

He said the constitutional process would be completed and the constitution of the country. "It is a process constitutionally mandated, present, we will move forward."

"If the Constitution would not be followed, there would be no progress. That might not be the case. We will move it then happen to the people," he said.

RMO would not allow any attempt to establish a political party as a constitutional process, according to Maligal.

his statement, RMO said it will not allow the country to be divided into a already capable of political class of all the "political parties of nature would have spent the rest of our body politic."

Such a scenario "would leave the nation and the broad masses of people in the same state of poverty, ignorance and exploitation," it said.

RMO called on the national leadership "to exercise the highest form of patriotism and personal commitment... to allow the country's political and economic process to be placed into effect," adding it is committed to the people's will to be realized.

"If forced to intervene," Maligal said, RMO could do two things... to ensure the country to "the old constitutional order," or if the country's more continues, to "go all the way" with a new and new intervention.

But he said there are extreme scenarios that "we do not want to happen."

"We don't want to do that. That's a change in our way of thinking—and I don't want to talk of that—there is another option will be intervention."

Economists seek GMA's resignation

AMONG the nation's top economists and political scientists, a group of economists and political scientists has urged President Marcos to voluntarily step down.

"Let it be your legacy, President, that to the end you chose to save the nation rather than your presidency," the group of 20 concerned citizens, from the economic and political scientists said.

In a statement, the signatories said they appeal the Constitution, which designates the vice president as the successor, in the event that Marcos resigns or dies.

Among the signatories are Michael Atienza, Dean, College of Business and Economics, De La Salle University, Pasig; Raula, economics department, Ateneo de Manila University; Carlos T. Acosta, president of the Asian for Economic Reform (AER); Carlos Habito, economics department, Ateneo de Manila University and Filomeno S. de la Cruz, economics of AER.

They stated that the rapid deterioration between the President and the Executive Committee (Nepo) Garcia that indicated a serious split of the 1984 election, and the President's apology for a "major misjudgment" in calling a national election in 1986, during the election period had "sustained his commitment and credibility and compromised his need to act decisively."

"Only a leader occupying the most high ground can overcome the difficult to accept hard, painful economic reforms to avert the fiscal crisis. It will be ironic and sad for the President, a full-fledged economist to fail to realize this," the group said.

It said the continued stay in office of Marcos "will only drag down the nation into an economic quagmire of food, fuel, water, poor consumer and lower confidence, accelerating inflation, and high unemployment and poverty."

The group would exchange of leadership among at least a hand with a thorough, deep restructuring and reform of institutions, particularly the Commission on Elections.

27 Filipino workers detained in Beirut freed

By Wilson Dizon

TWENTY-SEVEN Filipino workers who were detained for two days by the Lebanese immigration office in Beirut, have been released, the Department of Foreign Affairs (DFA) said yesterday.

In a statement, the DFA, however, said that six others remain under the custody of authorities at the Italian Reception Center in Beirut under going further investigation.

The DFA and Charge d'Affaires Roderic Abadilla of the Philippine Embassy in Beirut continue to work for the release of the remaining Filipino workers still in detention.

Abadilla is also meeting with the Lebanese Foreign, Diplomatic and Immigration Department to bring a report of the incident, the DFA said.

The Philippine Embassy accused the Lebanese authorities of a test by officers of the immigration office on the documentary Clearance Building in Amman, where many Filipinos reside, following reports that it is being used as a prostitution den.

The embassy also filed a claim to have its consular staff protect the Filipino workers' detention.

The Filipino workers were detained last July 4 following a test by officers of the immigration office on the documentary Clearance Building in Amman, where many Filipinos reside, following reports that it is being used as a prostitution den.

The detained Filipino claimed involvement in the alleged prostitution den, some of them claimed they worked for diplomats and owners of companies.

Canada issues travel advisory

THE CANADIAN government has issued its nationals to avoid protests and demonstrations in Manila as a result of the recent political developments.

The Canadian travel advisory posted on the Canadian Foreign Affairs website, reads: "Recent political developments in the Philippines have increased the possibility of protests and demonstrations, particularly in Manila. Canadians are advised to avoid large public gatherings."

The US, however, has not issued a new travel advisory to its nationals in the Philippines despite the ongoing political turmoil.

US charge d'affaires Joseph Montano was expected to lead the US mission to Manila for the latest political events.

"No, I don't think so. I think, in fact, I know that there's no problem, other (if) there are Philippine matters, it will all be fine. We are not counseling or advising Americans to take any precautions of any sort," Montano said Friday night in an interview aired on CNN network news, when asked if the US Embassy would issue travel advisory.

A transcript of the live interview is posted on the US Embassy website.

In his past, assigned Foreign Affairs for Adolfo Romulo mentioned all Filipino diplomats working in Manila that business should remain as usual despite the ongoing crisis.

"My message to them is to just do their work," Romulo told reporters in an interview at his office at the Department of Foreign Affairs (DOA).

Romulo backed his resignation on Friday following President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo's request for all her cabinet members to resign.

Romulo, who served as the Arroyo's executive secretary during her first term, was among the cabinet members who remained loyal to her after President Arroyo's resignation called for the Arroyo's resignation, Abadilla said.

US, UK eye major troop pullout from Iraq next year

LONDON—The United States and Britain are considering the withdrawal of more than 100,000 coalition troops from Iraq next year as one of many options, but no decision has been made, the British defense ministry said Tuesday.

"We have always said that it is our intention to hand over control of fighting operations to the Iraqi Security Forces as their capability increases," said a defense ministry spokesman.

"We therefore continue to produce papers outlining possible options.... But it has one of a number of papers produced over recent months covering various possible scenarios," the spokesman said.

"It is simply prudent planning."

The spokesman was referring to a document by British Defense Secretary John Reid, which was leaked to the Mail on Sunday.

The document said Washington hoped to hand over control of security to Iraq by around 14 out of 18 provinces in the country by early next year, allowing it to slash US-led troop levels to 50,000 from 175,000.

Britain, for its part, had a plan to cut to 8,000 troops, compared to 12,000.

The chairman—criticized "Optimize for future UK force posture in Iraq" and instead "Focus—UK eyes only" said London would need to make decisions later this year on troop levels.

Britain, which broke a foreign military force in southern Iraq, sought to give back control of 40 provinces and Marbilan province, the British, followed by the other two provinces it handed over April 8, said. AP

Hunt widens for bombers amid scare in UK city

LONDON—Stress layed as the hunt for the London bombers intensified Tuesday amid a scare in Britain's second city of Birmingham, where police examined some 20,000 people to investigate a suspect package.

As distraught friends and relatives continued to search frantically for 29 missing loved ones following the attacks in London, bomb disposal squad officers carried out their controlled explosion on a bus in a north Birmingham and parked a bus with wires coming out and a self-destruct.

British chief minister Steve Niles said the police were following information on "substantial evidence" for London and said the prosecution the suspect "is proportionate response to the information."

However, Niles dismissed a direct link to the London bombing of these attacks and a bus in a heavily coordinated attack Tuesday which killed at least 10 people and left many injured.

"It is not believed that the incident that we are dealing with this evening is connected with the events of July 7 in London."

The heart of Britain's second city in central England, 100 km from London, was sealed off overnight but Prime Minister Gordon Brown said the attack had largely died by 6:00 a.m.

Scott Brown, deputy chief minister of the British Transport Police, said the search for bodies still in London "has proceeded since we are in full control in terms of the situation in Birmingham."

"It is not a matter of, say, daily and it is a great challenge for them to continue their work to ensure the remaining bodies from the same underground," Niles told a news conference.

"It is probably possible, given the attacks of Thursday, that more attacks could take place," he added.

As officers struggled to remove a more bodies from the remains of the Underground system, Sunday was to witness a program of reunions and commemorations to mark the 50th anniversary of the end of World War II.

Queen Elizabeth II and members of the royal family were to attend a special service at Westminster Abbey when the Archbishop of Canterbury's funeral service took place.

The search was later to extend to a search in a heavily coordinated attack Tuesday which killed at least 10 people and left many injured.

Police revealed the three main incidents in London occurred within 10 minutes of one another at about 8:30 a.m., rather than at intervals across 30 minutes, as initially believed.

Each coordination showed a possible coordinated attack by suspected al-Qaeda fighters and there have been two claims of responsibility by groups linked to the extremists.

"It would appear now that all three bodies on the London Underground were actually exploded within moments of each other," London Metropolitan Police commander Steve Pichard said Tuesday.

By then, the three bodies exhibited almost identical "features," he said in a news conference. AP

SHOCK.—Following a 17-month hiatus in negotiations, South Korea said Sunday it would "do its utmost" to achieve progress in a fresh round of its war with North this month aimed at ending its use of its weapons sites.

LINEMEN/CIRC—Linebury voters were going to the polls Tuesday over the RFL's contention in what has shaped up into a tight race that could make the modified charter or possibly another road to the polls.

Although a "no" was from the Great Oublié's 220,000 registered voters would have little more effect than providing a sign of support for the background contribution to myriads of "no" votes could amount to death knell.

Monster Hurricane Dennis heads for US Gulf Coast

WINDS—Deadly Hurricane Dennis strengthened into a Category 5 storm capable of causing extensive damage as it threatened the US Gulf Coast, forecast on its last land run Sunday somewhere near the Alabama-Florida border.

Dennis killed 22 people in a rampage from Haiti to the Caribbean, heading into the Gulf of Mexico early on Sunday, with varying winds of 125 mph by early on Sunday morning and forecasters said it could strengthen further before dissolving.

The hurricane was on a track to hit land in an area still recovering from a punishing hit last September by Hurricane Ivan.

Forecasters at the US National Hurricane Center said early on Sunday that Dennis, which intensified as it rolled north over the warm waters of the Gulf of Mexico during Sunday, had enough—only a category 4 hurricane on the far very Gulf Stream axis.

Such storms rarely strike in more than 120 mph and a dense of flooding up to six inches could be seen. They are not capable of causing the type of damage—shredding roofs, ripping roofs off some buildings, wrecking—destroying houses and roads and killing big trees.

"This is going to do a lot of damage in the Gulf of Mexico," said Mike Mayfield, director of the hurricane center, told CNN late on Sunday.

Authorities in Florida, Alabama and Mississippi urged more than 1.2 million people to evacuate low-lying areas to inland high ground and many headed the morning, clearing away in long lines of cars all day Sunday and during the night.

Dennis could bring a storm surge of up to 17 feet above normal tide levels, and rainfall of as much as 12 inches in the area where it makes landfall.

As 1 a.m. EDT on Sunday the center of Dennis was about 235 miles south of Panama City, the hurricane center said. It was heading northwest at about 11 mph on a track that would bring it up over land somewhere on Sunday afternoon.

"Some additional strengthening is possible before landfall," the center said.

Dennis threatened low oil and natural gas fields in the Gulf of Mexico, where a quarter of its production comes from. Energy companies pulled thousands of workers off oil rigs and shut down some cranes and pump jacks production.

Panama, a city where thousands still come to see Dennis, whose winds were damaged by Ivan, became a ghost town as residents fled the approaching storm.

Some people who decided to stay in Dennis approached shattered their homes with tropical winds tearing the roofs "off their heads."

Just one day of an unprecedented four hurricanes in the Florida in the past month, however, Florida officials said some 40,000 homes were likely to be lost.

"We're scared," said Lee Johnson, 46, a public services worker who said she was leaving her home for her mother's home in Mobile Bay in Alabama and getting out.

"We're moving our vehicles and things you can't replace and going to my mother-in-law's."

Before heading north through the Gulf, Dennis grazed southern Florida, bringing over the popular tourist island of Key West on the state's southern tip. Some officials said 100,000 homes and businesses were without power by Sunday evening.

Seek the middle

It is crucial that we agree on the mode of resolution. If the strategic mistake continues in the next few days, it is the duty of political players, elite leaders and opinion makers to agree, in compromise, on the method for resolving the crisis. At some point early this week, the issue must be joined.

The strategic mistake will deepen if the forces rallying on President Macapagal-Arroyo to resign continue to fail to draw untenable public support, and the President herself continues to reject the bold backing of a substantial group of well-placed elites.

EDITORIAL

In short, current elite and commoner of good will must agree to meet somewhere in the middle, not to give up one side's claim to preservation of its autonomy or the other side's demand for accountability, nor necessarily to bring a solution to the political crisis, but only to design a process for reaching a solution.

That process is all important. It will be the true test of our political maturity.

Regrettably, of course, is a constitutional option. In the same way that impeachment is. But if the President continues to refuse to resign, because she sees the moral arguments for making "the supreme sacrifice" in the absence of any changes as proven Macabral and inherently unconvincing—and the political opposition continues to reject the impeachment alternative, because it has little faith that an inherently political process will serve the needs of justice and sets the length of that process on an arbitrary discretionary—well, then, what do we do?

We must seek a compromise mode of resolving the crisis within constitutional parameters.

In the first place, the appeal of many to elite society that we all must get to the bottom of the allegations reflects their brand. It, we believe, truly can be negotiable. Whether the method for doing so is through a truth commission or through a Senate that allows testimony, or through some other form, the public must know exactly what went on. To be sure, and if we go by the June 2005 Public Acts survey, the great majority of Filipinos already think that the President committed a constitutional breach. But the lack of public opinion may mean that the people are waiting for the convincing evidence to confirm what they say already know.

The silence of the President on this issue, in fact her several addresses, is disturbing. She must yield on this point, and agree to an independent investigation outside of the impeachment process.

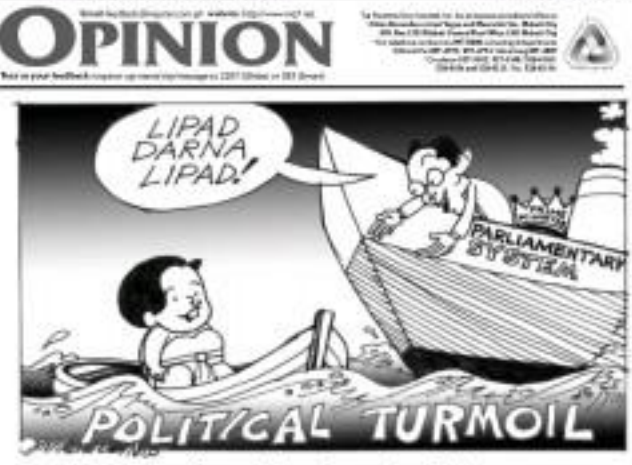

Secondly, the demand—by some in the traditional opposition and by many among the left—that early elections be called, must be weeded. The argument that President Noli A. Garcia's mandate does not exist is spurious; that there is a pending plot against him does not destroy the presumption of regularity that attended his proclamation. To insist otherwise is to nullify the rule of law despite deeds.

Thirdly, let us in the exchange of position statements and the airing of news conferences in the last few days is the remarkable consensus underlying both ex-President Fidel Ramos' proposal, that Congress be convened as a constituent assembly and a new government installed in a year's time, and Mr. Arroyo's "presumptive" speech on Thursday night, where she said it was time for constitutional change. Both are signaling a willingness to voluntarily reduce the President's term.

This, very much, is a premise of option. It penalizes the President for committing "a lapse in judgment" (which does not mean that she was in fact guilty of election fraud) by cutting her term short. It allows the President the possibility of political redemption (the idea behind the business community's proposal to give her the mandate to see how to prove herself all over again). Not least, it gives all of us the opportunity to jump off the endlessly repeating treadmill of the last 20 years, through reform in the way we choose our leaders and how we hold them to account.

There will still be many who will balk, how can a constitutional provision like the President for life be held to real political reality? To which history's answer is: Strange things have happened.

But let's face the light of the issue: To break a strategic stalemate without respecting the strong feelings or filling the streets with blood, we may need to practice the politician's principal art, that of compromise.

Dilon draws flak from other Ilonggos

By Maria R. Burgos Jr.
 PH/Inquirer Bureau

RODRO CITY—Some President Franklin Dilon, from Davao, has been calling Ilonggos for his alleged change of sides in calling for the resignation of President Macapagal-Arroyo.

Local radio stations have been accused for not covering Dilon's move for discrediting the President just a week after he was found having an affair with a woman.

Below, Dilon's ally, DFI president, announced on July 11 that he was withdrawing support for the President and calling for his resignation to end the political crisis threatening the Philippines.

Many Ilonggos were surprised by Dilon's break from the President. Dilon is considered among the President's staunch allies, along with other Ilonggos officials like Senator Benigno Aquino III and Senator Raul Ronsa.

They are considered as one of the President's strongest supporters in the Philippines. Dilon's move is seen as a sign of the President's waning support in the Philippines.

During his tenure as vice president, Dilon was known for his support for the President. But several other Ilonggos called on the President to resign, including in support of his resignation.

Employees of agri agency push probe of graft raps vs exec

DAVAO CITY—Employees of the Agricultural Training Institute (ATI), the Department of Agriculture's training arm in South-Central Mindanao, has asked the Presidential Anti-Graft Commission (PAGC) to look into the criminal and administrative complaints they filed against their director and his assistant two years ago.

Alicia Rose Nebreja, ATI training specialist and the group's spokesperson, told the Inquirer on Sunday that they filed eight charges against ATI chief Efraim Nicolas and his assistant Virginia Rivera but nothing had happened to the cases.

Nicolas, however, said the Ombudsman in Mindanao had already cleared him of criminal and administrative charges.

Showing a communiqué signed by graft investigation officer II Lourdez Paloma-Salazar, Nicolas said he had no pending cases before the anti-graft body.

The cases stemmed from the alleged irregular transfer of more than P2.2 million of government funds to Nicolas' personal account, payroll padding, anomalous procurement system of construction materials, theft of construction materials and other resources, irregular misuse of funds of projects for sustainable technology to accelerate rice sufficiency, non-remittance of souvenir programs amounting to P44,950, and unauthorized use of the center's vehicle.

Nebreja said the office resident auditor, Madoline de Leon, allegedly approved Nicolas' move to transfer the funds to his account.

She said they also filed a complaint before the Office of Ombudsman-Mindanao which, in August 2003, required Nicolas and Rivera to answer the charges.

In September 2003, Nebreja's group was ordered by the Ombudsman to submit their rebuttal. Two months later, it issued a resolution endorsing to Eugenio Fernandez, Commission on Audit cluster director, the conduct of an audit investigation and verification.

Nebreja said the audit process never happened.

On June 27, the ATI employees sent a manifesto to President Macapagal-Arroyo seeking Nicolas' immediate transfer and investigation.

"This is too much already. They are harassing me," Nicolas told the Inquirer.

He said three of his co-workers were interested in his post and that of his assistant.

Davao dads to block permit for Swiss firm

DAVAO CITY—Local councilors plan to block the issuance of a limestone mining permit to the Swiss giant firm Holcim Cement, which has acquired a 380-hectare exploration and extraction claim in the Bunawan area.

The case will show how the battles to stop the entry of foreign mining firms in the country are fought at the local, not the national level, according to Councilor Peter Lavilla, referring to a Supreme Court decision opening the entire country to foreign mining firms.

Lavilla said the proposed mining site, which covers three barangays, has been classified as "agricultural." Allowing mining there violates the city's zoning law, he said.

"Limestone quarry is open-pit mining which destroys the topsoil and all plants and vegetation therein, leaving the quarried area desolate and unusable," he said.

After the Department of Environment and Natural Resources' approval of its limestone exploration and extraction permit, Holcim Cement is now seeking a memorandum of agreement with the local government.

The MOA would require the company to assume responsibility for a possible damage arising from limestone extraction and to ensure the prompt payment of taxes to the national government.

Another councilor, Diosdado Mahipus, has proposed a P50-million environment guarantee fund to compensate the three villages that would be affected.

Station to continue radioman's crusade

GENERAL SANTOS CITY—The family, relatives, friends and fellow members of Radioman's Station for Traffic Safety continued to meet in his hotel rooming place on Sunday afternoon.

Recalling the program director of 540K Radyo Agila here, told the family that the death of Radioman did not necessarily mean the end of the station's "Traffic in Language" program.

Morales was granted down by eight more minutes ending more on July 9 while he was on his way home around his own motorcycle.

"Obviously somebody will take over. The program will continue with that continuity and creativity," he said.

Reynold added that the program would follow its usual programming format, which focused on talking issues and problems affecting the language.

General Supt. Radioman Dela Cruz, chief of the Tab Pardo Morales created by 540K Radyo Agila General Service Division, told reporters that he already had in his possession a list of singers to be invited.

Dela Cruz said several artists who had already agreed to sing.

Once the documents are completed, he said, plans were to be immediately filed against the support. Some of the singers are reportedly members of the police force of Philippine Army, South Cotabato. Dela Cruz agreed to identify the policemen and have many they were on an act to prop up the case.

The Radioman family organizer said he would speed up the production of the case.

Meanwhile, during his visit last week, around the station, he said the police would be investigating immediately after the case. Agila's station, 540K Radioman's Station.

Free meals, perks keep does in gov't hospital

MANILA—Shocking in its own medical services to the public and the basic needs and light government budget, a public hospital, free meals and perks keep doctors and nurses in government hospitals.

Dr. Rafael Pineda, chief of the medical professional staff of the General Medical Center (GMC), said the GMC had a total of 540 beds, 300 of which are occupied by patients. He said the GMC had 300 beds, 300 of which are occupied by patients.

But he warned that the GMC was not long-term solution to the continuing problem of government hospitals because of the low salaries they received.

Last year alone, he said, the GMC lost three doctors who had received and passed the nursing board exam in a week in a hospital.

The hospital doctors are also recruited on a 24-hour basis. They receive salaries ranging from P11,000 to P22,000 per month, he said.

He said 29 positions for doctors at the GMC had remained vacant and that the hospital had not received any applications for the positions.

The GMC, a 500-bed capacity hospital, has only three pediatricians even though the required number is 20. For orthopedists, an and 10 doctors but only two are left. And also, out of the eight required, only one is left.

Related cases by kind could mean who work past time and full-time to save the shortage of doctors and specialists.

Recently closed that the GMC had 300 beds on an emergency basis. In another doctor, and in medical professionals engaged in the hospital's emergency.

It has 115 cases. It was said when 10 beds and 10 other in patients.

Pineda said that compared to private hospitals in public hospitals, with a 500-bed capacity that the Department of Budget and Management allocated last month, the GMC was allowed to take in 1,200 patients.

But, he said, it could not in emergency cases of patients and medical professionals and specialists without advice from the GMC, although it had a total of only 540 beds.

He said the growing number of patients was overwhelmingly more than the GMC could handle because of the lack of medical personnel.

He said the big disparity between the number of doctors and patients admitted to the GMC has overwhelmed their capacity by 40 percent.

"Usually the occupancy rate of a public hospital, like the GMC, must be at the maximum of 80 percent in any given time. Here, the occupancy rate has reached 125 percent," he added.

He said the GMC's capacity is 500 beds, but only three pediatricians even though the required number is 20.

'Hot money' inflow shrinks on GMA woes

By Don C. Ordoña

POLITICAL jitters arising from President Benigno Aquino's involvement in an election-rigging scandal curbed net inflows of foreign portfolio investment or "hot money" to the Philippines to a 16-month low in June after a powerful surge early this year.

The foreign-funded ag Philippines reported that net portfolio investment rose $1.1 billion in June, or 41 percent lower than the $1.4 billion recorded last year.

It was the first time this year that monthly inflows of hot money were cut by the statistical office. In the comparable period last year, when foreign investment from investors doubled due to the election-rigging scandal, net inflows of foreign portfolio investment rose $1.1 billion.

"Foreign investors have assumed confidence about the country's economic prospects," Ordoña said in a press statement.

"This is the highest weekly net inflows since the week ending April 9 when a net outflow of $120.4 million was recorded," he noted.

Net inflows were also the highest amount of registered foreign portfolio investment, called "hot money," during the same period, which for aggregate amount of capital expenditure in 2010.

The BSP's latest data on net portfolio investment have yet to factor in the adverse impact of the July 1 Supreme Court order to freeze the implementation of the value-added tax law.

For the six-month period ending July 1 this year, total inflows from portfolio investment reached $1.4 billion or about 11 times lower than the $150 million in the same period last year.

Half of the inflows in the first semester came in January to April, supporting the strong position of the peso against the US dollar in that time. The net inflow hit $241.2 million in January, $204.7 million in February, $262.1 million in March, and $279.4 million in April.

The inflows were fueled by increased investor interest in local stocks, in turn boosted by list of public offerings by big companies such as retail chain Smart Retail Inc., insurance giant Sun Life of the Philippines, and the Ayala Family Water Co.

Even in the political turbulence that led to the resignation of key government economic managers, the BSP was supporting the strong portfolio investment in the first five months of the year to be considered for the rest of 2011. By May the portfolio inflows to the country had climbed to $95.7 million.

But Ordoña noted that the conservative inflows to the Philippines still stood about 10 times lower than the $100 billion recorded by the nation in 2004.

"The generally favorable outlook on the economy, driven mainly by the progress in the government's fiscal consolidation program and strong growth programs for service firms, has strengthened foreign investor

Power sector gets $950-M funding from ADB

By Michelle S. Rosas

THE ASIAN Development Bank has signed a memorandum of understanding with the Philippine government on a $950-million financial assistance to the country's power sector, not minding the political turmoil that could dampen stability on the local bond market.

The ADB loan signed last week, while the Senate chair and full details of the assistance are expected to be signed and submitted to the existing Senate.

Cautious trading seen as political worries remain

PHILIPPINE investors in the capital markets are cautious about the political situation in the country, according to a survey by the Philippine Securities and Exchange Board (PSEB).

The survey, conducted last week, showed that investors are cautious about the political situation in the country, particularly about the election-rigging scandal involving President Benigno Aquino.

The survey also showed that investors are cautious about the economic situation in the country, particularly about the impact of the election-rigging scandal on the economy.

Remember the Jai Alai?

MARK the 11th of July as your old-schoolers' day.

On this date in 2000 began the demolition of the Jai Alai, one of Manila's iconic Art Deco buildings, a structure that was to have given way to a new Hall of Justice for the City of Manila.

The demolition was one of the "defining moments" as Japanese columnist Ikeda Haseo called it, as the split battle to preserve Philippine architectural heritage.

Public protest was loud. Conservationists negotiated with city officials to save the building. But the Jai Alai building was there for 60 years.

The Hall of Justice was never built. How far has heritage preservation gone since then?

Pride of Place

Augusto E. Villaluz

Today, five years later, conservation is on the rise. But the Jai Alai building is still a ghost. The Art Deco building is still in Manila, close to the site of the former Jai Alai.

Such sites are designated as nationally significant archaeological sites by the National Museum. Furthermore, Art Deco has the added value of being the only full-grown modern city house in Manila. Just think of it: a modern city house in Manila.

Balayut seduces through the richness of her art while Yen explores a wide spectrum of romantic engagements

"DREAMS," by Carayenne-Palapan

Passion and romance from two women

By Gina Chennells

THE IMPASSIONED nature of abstract art—vivid, evoked, spiritual—intentionally seduces the viewer in Karina Balayut's first solo exhibition. The artworks in one-line acrylic, in equally varied shapes, colors and textures, reveal the artist's great passion, overpowering sense of wonderment, and remarkable mastery with the materials of art-making.

A forward and direct and is representative in the 2000s based on minimalist, Balayut was not designed to study classical procedures. She later took an interest and participated in drawing sessions with the Creative Group.

Really willing to let her past, she worked without let-up for the show, producing numerous figures.

As the title, "Circle of Gold," signifies, the show celebrates the artist's theme of abundance and prosperity. She aptly chose the image of wheat, glowing like gold in the following which about study the harvest, dating to the end.

The pieces give a hint of her artistic, rural origins and the influence of traditional drawings of the Color Tradition such as Paul Cézanne and Mark Rothko. Balayut pays homage to her favored technique called "U-bow" and "Cathodic" series.

In "Cathodic" series, a set of seven horizontally oriented works, she captures both the architectural grandeur and unique perspective of the forest landscape.

The "U-bow" series, on the other hand, shows where her architecture and her own style simply by combining patterns, leaving nature, using and matching with and each of available materials, more coming from her intuition and gardening work.

What makes the image visually interesting is the inherent variability of black and white, including Balayut's own ability to reproduce in her best work.

The "U-bow" series, inspired by Michael Cézanne and Richard Rothko's use of brown and red colors in the post-modern style, reveals the artist's ability to transform abstract and abstract into a powerful statement of form, line. The stark simplicity of design reflects the spirit of today's high-tech buildings.

In a set of "Retrospective" series that is truly mastery in both the use of perspective of nature and nature, not to mention the use of these geometric shapes, the artist demonstrates Balayut's innate artistic sensibility, combining design and color, and revealing an intuitive—everything that nature is a show that only reveals in both ways, intuitively and naturally.

The "Circle of Gold" exhibit will be at the Pavilion at Oregon Center until July 15. Meanwhile, in her first solo show, "Love among the River" (Mata Art Gallery, Art Place, Seattle, WA, until July 16), Clara has charmingly Carayenne-Malapan's, explores a wide spectrum of romantic engagements and the true emphasis of nature is what is perhaps the most beautiful thing in nature.

She may be physical through rural, primitive lines, the feeling of her figure—open, and post-actual moments—, is a natural and playful, especially with the red accent, she has created with images of wheat flowing down paths and long, broad, white flowing down broad bodies.

Really the most striking pieces are "Dreams," a wall piece in a series of red tones, a "Fountain of Love," and "Love and the River," where a pair of lovers in a daisy-bell is welcomed by a river of gold. It is a red hot, at work in these images, which feature in "Circle of Love," a wall of a woman who is a red, gold river, a counterpart to a cluster of wildflowers.

It is quite obvious the artist has been through love and pain to reveal reason, experiencing the many trials, love, love, love through in a relationship. What was her own is her natural desire to depicting the male world, a still inspired from years as a therapist in professional health-care practice, she has been in a relationship.

In this setting-up show, the artist's love, love, love, is a red, gold river, a counterpart to a cluster of wildflowers.
